

CLANCY'S PRINTING Service

Dye Sublimation and Heat Transfer.

Dye-Sublimation is a digital fabric printing process where the design is first printed onto specialised paper the printed paper is then applied to your chosen garment with the aid of a Heat Press. The resultant sandwiching effect & heat help the dye to penetrate & fixate from the paper, onto the fabric. Design is provided by the customer as a digital file. Garment must contain a large percentage of polyester for this process to work.

Heat transfer is for most other fabrics, with people sensitive to synthetics a solution had to be found so that we could offer the same service to our customers that can only use natural fabrics. So we print to a printable light film/fabric and then transfer that to your garment via the Heat Press once again.

It is a white satiny film that is thin, flexible and suitable on light and dark textiles. Very easy to use, it gives a vibrant result thanks to its high printing quality and its fast ink drying time. It also provides high wearing comfort with its thin and soft touch aspect and benefits are evident from a great wash'n'wear resistance. Finally, it is completely eco-friendly (free of PVC and heavy metals) which is also ideal to use for children's clothing.

Washing / Maintenance Guide

Our transfer films are of commercial quality and when washed correctly will only deteriorate as the garment deteriorates over months of washing

- Do not iron directly over your transfer. If you need to iron to remove creases from your print, it should be done from underneath. Always ensure fabric is between the iron and transfer.
- Do not dry clean
- To maintain vibrance of prints, do not wash with strong detergents or bleaches. Cold wash only.

Do not try to remove the transfer once applied as they will not come off
